White confirms no Labor policy on lowering electricity prices

04 February 2018

Guy Barnett, Minister for Energy

Opposition Leader Rebecca White has today confirmed that Labor has no policy and no idea on lowering power prices.

After raising electricity prices by 65 per cent in seven years when last in Government, you would think Labor would be in full support of the important NEM-Exit policy we announced today.

But in a trainwreck interview, Ms White failed to indicate what Labor's policy is despite being repeatedly asked by reporters.

Ms White did openly concede that Labor's move to link prices to Victorian prices was a mistake. The question is, if Labor already know that, how can they possibly not have a position on what to do about it?
